Railway Travelling in Russin.

We proceeded, bag and baggage, to the station of the Moscow Railway. Only one train starts daily; and the hour at which the most important event takes place is, or ought to be eleven, A. M. Travellers are commanded by the government to be at the station at ten precisely; and even then they are liable to be told that the train is full—as it is quite an unheard of thing to put on an extra carriage for any number of passengers. Having arrived, therefore, at ten minutes before ten, to be quite sure of being in time, our baggage was seized by a soldier, policeman, or railway porter, (for they all wear somewhat the same uniform,) and carried in one direction, while we rushin another to show our passport for Muscow, to procure which we had been to three different offices the day before. Here the descriptions of our persons and our reasons for travelling, which it contained, being copied at full length, we were hurried to another counter, where we got it stamped; whence, catching sight of our baggage en passant, we sped on to the ticket office, and then returning to our portmanteaux, we went through a few formalities, which ended in receiving a ticket to add to the number of those with which our pockets were now pretty well filled.

The anxiety of mind which such a variety of documents causes is not to be wondered at when the consequences which the loss of them, would entail are considered. Ladies in Russia do not think of trying to carry their tickets in their gloves. We now betook ourselves to the waiting room, which we should have thought handsome had we not been detained in it so long that we got tired of admiring it. For an hour did the destined occupants of the train sit patiently on the benches, every man with head uncovered-for even a skull cap is an abomination to a Russian under a roof. Every man in military garb seemed to have the entree to the platform, while the doors was rigorously shut against us unhappy civilians. At a quarter before eleven, however, they are opened -a general rush follows, and we are hurried through a barrier, the doors of which close behind us. Soon the whole barrier becomes thronged with people, waving their adieus as ardently as if we were booked for Australia. A bell, a whistle, and a sort of dull attempt at a scream, are, as in more civilized parts of the world, the signals for starting, we leave he weeping eyes and waving pocket handkerchiefs behind us and, in the course of ten minutes, find, to our satisfaction, that we have increased our speed to fifteen miles an hour. We have hardly done so ere we arrive at a station. Everybody rushes out and lights a digarette.

We are to stop here ten minutes, and the people during that time walk up and down the platform and smoke : then we huddle into our old places, and have time to look about us. The carriages are large. Nobody seems to go in the first-class. A second class carriage accommodates about fifty people. They are built as in Austria and America, with a passage in the center, perambulated by a man in uniform, who occasionally asks people for their tickets. He seems you have got one, and afterwards merely as an amuse fancies you are going to sleep. The men are bearded and dirty, and relate stories in a loud tone of voice, for the benefit of the whole company, most of whom have evidently never been in a railway before. At ends of the last station's segars having been carefully fair lecturer's voice slightly trembled with emotion.) preserved, are lighted afresh, and vehemently smoked on the platform during five or ten minutes, as the blessedness, many of the squalis and breezes that case may be The stations are all very spacious and uniformly constructed with an immense domed building for engines attaching to each. Though there is only one passenger-train daily, there are three goods trains, always well loaded with inland produce, tallow, fur, tea, &c., or with cotton from St Petersburg, "I shall confine my observations, my dears, to to the interior. Here you can linger profitably for hours, contemplating the noblest of God's creation—man; here converse silently with the living and the dead, until the withered arm of menery seems again restored and strengthened, and reaches forth its hand to greet those with whom we were once intimately associated, but now inhabit the gloomy prison house of forgetfulness. Chilstmas Day.

Strictly speaking, and for all religious observances, to-morrow will be Christmas Day-literally, we suppose, "Christ-mass," or the mass of Christ, the celebration being commemorative of the rativity. and the English name of it, at least, originating in times when the Roman Catholic Church embraced renders further comment unnecessary : all Western Christianity. However that may be the feetival, in a worldly point of view, will be kept on Monday, by many whose ideas of religious duty do not comport with the observance of any religious holidays, except the one day in seven, known as Sabbath or Sunday. In fact, generally speaking, Chrismas is more looked forward to as a season of good fellowship and good cheer-the interchange of presents and tokens of affections-the renewal of friendships, and the making up of quarrels, than with any direct reference to its original meaning. And, after all, perhaps this may be a very good practical illustration of the precepts of one whose mission was to put forth your arm to save and protect the ark of bring peace on earth and good will to men. If festivity sometimes runs into excess, -- and we see very little of that here, generally speaking, -- it is deeply to from the fierce liberticidal attacks of abolitionists, half rushing terrified from his room. We have heard the story of a man having been swapped off in his childhood, but a more mysterirous case of the loss of identity came to our ears a couple of days since. Here it is:

A few weeks since a Benedict, whose silvery hair proclaimed him on the wrong side of fifty, came to Cincinnati. Being a man of taste as well as means, he made the Burnet House his residence. The morning after his arrival he visited the magnificent saloon of our friend Aleck Ferguson, who, observing that his customer's hair and whiskers wore a very wintry appearance, suggested the propriety of his gelting Colonel Clemens distinguished himself in the Senate them dyed. Now, our hero, not being addicted to vanity, at first or jected, but Aleck swore that it was a shame such silken locks with a natural, wavy curl should be allowed to retain its frosty character, and the gentleman finnally resigned his cranium to the hands of Aleck, who very speedily-by the help of ·· Cristadora's cosmetic for changing red or grey hair to a beautiful brown or black "-- as the advertisement has it-transmogrified him from a rather antiquated specimen of a gentleman, in the "sere and yellow leal," to a juvenile looking Adons of twenty-eight .any interference by members of the federal govern- The transformation was most gratifying to our hero, who being rather a good looking fellow, felt proud of himself and accordingly displayed his handsome figure for several days in the principal promenades of Going to his apartment, he undressed himself, and without the formality of striking a light, got into bed and in a short time was and of Morpheus. The morning beams were dancing in diamond splendor upon the floor of the bedchamber, when he was awakened by a terrific thought he sprang from his bed and followed her, visions of madness floating through his imagination At length she reached the parlor, where sinking upon the sofa, she fainted outright. By dint of sal volatile and other restorative she was shortly revived, when gazing upon her husband, who was mournfully bending over her, she exclaimed that she was ruined, dishonored and undone.

" Be calm, dearest," said he soothingly. At the sound of the voice, she started and gave one piercing look, and, as she recognized the well known features, burst into tears and sprung into his arms. It appears that, upon awaking, instead of the familiar "frosty pow" of her leige lord, she discovered a redundant quantity of dark brown hair and whiskers. This caused her alarm and flight from the marital couch. The lady, who is many years the junier, is perfectly charmed with the alteration, and feels quite proud of her old man. Thus the adventure turned out happily at last. Had it been otherwise, Mr. Ferguson might have had a load upon his conscience, national Union democrats" at the Chinese Museum. Had it not been for the paintings that still survive on the walls of the exhumed dwellings, the moderns would have had no adequate conception of the immorality of the ancients All that Tacitus has written of the licentiousness of Roman Emperors fails to make an impression equal to that produced by these indecent Pictures. For that an idle, luxurious and despotic monarch should violate every law, human and divine, seems not impossible, but that private citizens should imitate their example. surpasses be ief, which is proved by the walls of Pompeii. On these walls; the walls of dwellings. the walls of the common sitting room; the walls on which husband and wife, mother and daughter, maiden and suiter gazed in company, are seen paintings which would discruce the vilest modern baging The universality of these pictures proves that it was not a few dissolute young men, who thus covered the walls of their rooms, but that fathers of families, citizens of highest rank and even grave enators were equally guilty. How gross and corrupt must that state of society have been, in which licentiousness not only shook off all decorum, but sat in the very domestic circle.

CARRIERS' ADDRESS. TO THE PATRONS AND PRIENDS OF THE DAILY AND WEEKLY JOURNAL

KIND PRIENDS, the custom of this festive time Demands the humble tribute of a rhyme-To greet each patron with a passing lay, And wish to all a " merry Christmas day," Crown'd by bright smiles and joyous Christmas cheer, And follow'd by the promise of a glad new year; Where hope may find reality at last, And each fresh hour be happier than the past. We can but wish,-for on life's chequer'd scene, We know what is to be, from what has been; We know that joy alternates still with sorrow-That smiles to-day may turn to clouds to-morrow.

CHRISTMAS DAY, DECEMBER 25, 1853.

Each private bosom knows its private grief, To which no public plaudits bring relief; Nor stern assault can add a sharper sting To those which sadden'd memory may bring : A childless President who mourns his son-His last, his noblest and his only one-E'en in success may feel his rising joy Check'd by the image of his mangled boy ; E'en in reverse may all too deeply know That fate no darker trial can bestow; The praise-the censure, or the wild outery Of "Hards" and "Softs" may pass unheeded by; The heart must feel that in this turmoil fierce, Ambition claims no thoughts from Franklin Pierce.

While fashion's votaries thronged the shore, Where breaks the ocean, or beside the roar Of wild Niagara, pass'd away the hours, Or sought for health (3) in Saratoga's bowers; Or view'd that house of glass, which playful malice, In sportive mood, had nam'd "the Crystal Palace." While peace and plenty bless'd the smiling land, Pale pestilence hung o'er its Southern strand-Hung o'er the orange groves, whose breezes blow Soft perfumes to the gulf of Mexico-Hung c'er that Southern Queen who sits beside The "Crescent" sweep of Mississippi's tide-Hung o'er her homes, where oft at ev'ning's close The wearied sons of toil had sought repose-Hung o'er her prouder halls of wealth and state. How soon, alas, left lone and desolate.

That scourge has pass'd away, and scarce a trace Remains to mark it, save the burial-place, Where trench and pit received the mingled mass Of what was human life, but now, alas. Where swol'n corruption has assumed its sway, And e'en the human form has passed away. Save where is told the sadly piteous tale In widows' tears and friendless orphans' wail. Like Ocean's waves above a sunken bark, As bright the surface shines, beneath as dark, Rolls on the living tide that rushes o'er The place that knew them once-but never more May echo to their tread .- Like dew in sun-They passed away-their earthly race was run Embattled thousands stand on Danube's shore, Old Enxine trembles to the cannon's roar: Circassia's vallies echo back the cheer Of bearded Tark or sturdy mountaineer; While pour along to dare the dubious fight, The serried legions of the Muscovite,

To drive the crescent from old Stamboul's walls, And plant the cross above her Sultan's halls. But things are chang'd since once the wild crusade Drew western arms to eastern christians' aid, The paling crescent seeks but simple right --The cross-a pretext for unhallow'd might. To stretch the Empire of the grasping Russ, O'er the bright waters of the Bosphorus. But all in vain, for still even vet Old Fingland's fleets and France's bayonet May strike for justice, and the Russian bear Be driven back, howling, to his Northern lair. So let it be-but come whatever may, The straightest course is still our wisest way, To guard with care the rights our father's won. To bear aloft our flag untrampled on, To do no wrong ourselves, and suffer none To keep aloof from foreign strifes and broils, To seek no conquest, and to crave no spoils.

Our rhyme is rhymed, our simple lay With passing things, will pass away; Our task is done-we trust that you Will let "the devils" have their due. May have a "merry Christmas day."

The senior Devil on behalf of himself and all the little Dev-, would beg leave to state, that the poetical market is badsupplied, and that, after tremendous exertions, the above author, a cross-eved man, with a had hat, went off after the so that no legal steps have yet been taken to bring him to punishment. The suggestion, we think, is good and We did apply to the Editor, who responded to our call by quoting the following times from the immortal Epic of the gifted Smellfungus

No more a man can make himself a poet,

One winter there came to Trenton two men named Smith and Jones, who had both of them designs upon the legislature. Jones had a bad wife and was in love with a woman; he wished to be divorced from the bad wife so that he might marry the pretty woman, who by the way was a widow, with black eyes and such a bust! Therefore Jones came to Trent on to

Smith had a good wife, plump as a tortoise, good as an angel, and the mother of ten children, and Smith di! not want to get divorced, but di! want to get a turnpike or plank road from Pigs' Run to Terwisdom with the usual arguments, 1st, suppers mainly composed of oysters, with a rich back ground of venison : 2d, liquids in great plenty, from Jersey light. liquid shape,) to Newark Champagne. To speak in plain terms Jones, the divorce man, gave a champagne supper, and Smith the turnpike man, followed on with a champagne breakfast. Under the molitying influence of these appliances nike bills; and Jones and Smith (each with a copy of his bill in his pocket,) went home rejoicing, over miles of sand, and through the tribulation of many stage coaches. Smith arrived home the next evening and as he sat down in the parlor, his loving wife beside him, how pretty she did look! and five of his children asleep overhead, the other five studying their to expatiate upon the good results of his mission to

" A urnpike, my dear-I am one of the directors, and will be President; it will set us un love, we can send the children to a boarding school, and live in style out of the toll. Here is the charter honey. Let me see it," said the pleased wife who was one of the nicest of women with plumpness and goodness dimpled all over her face ; Let me see it ;" and she leaned over Smith's shoulder, pressing her arm upon his own, as she looked at the parchment. But ill at once Smith's face grew long. Smith's visage grew dark. Smith was not at all profane but now he rip-ped an awful oath "d-n, wife, those infernal coun-drels at Trenton have divorced us " It was too true. The parchment which he held was a bill of divorce, in which the name of Smith and Smith's wife appeared in frightfully legible letters-Mrs. Smith wiped her eyes with the corner of her apron. "Here's Turnpike," she said sadly, and with the whole ten children staring her in the face, "1 ain't your wife ? Here's a Turnpike !" "D-n the Turnpike, and the Legislature, and the Well the fact is, that Smith, reduced to single blessedness "enacted" into a stranger to his own wife, swore awfully. Although the night was dark, and most of the denizens of Smith's village had gone to specifully inform their friends and the public, that they are now receiving and opening a general assortment of domestic and other GOODS, adapted to the RETAIL BUSINESS of the town and country. alone, so that he could give vent to the suppressed laughter, that was shaking him all over. And Smith and Smith's wife went home and kissed every one of their ten children. The little Smiths never knew that their father and mother had been made strangers by legislative enactment.

Meanwhile, and on the same night, Jones returned to his town-Burlington, I believe, and sought that fine pair of black eyes which he hoped shortly to call his own. The pretty widow sat by him on the sofa, a white handkerchief tied carelessly about her round white throat, her black hair laid in silky waves against each 10sy cheek.
"Divorce is the word," cried Jones, playfully patting her cheek. "The fact is, Eliza, I'm rid of that cursed woman and you and I'll be married tonight. I know how to manage these scoundrels at Trenton. A champagne supper (or was it breakfast ?) did the business with them. Pat on your bonnet and things and let us go to the preacher's at once, dearest !"

The widow who was among widows as peaches are among apples, put on her bonnet and took John's

"Oh, blazes!" cried Jones, and sank beside her. rustling the fatal parchment in his hand. Here's lots of happiness and champagne gone to ruin!" It was a case. Instead of being divorced, and at liberty to marry the widow, Jacob Jones was simply incorporated into a turnpike company, and which made it worse, authorized with his brother directors to construct a turnpike from Burlington to Bristol - WAYNE INSTITUTE AND NORMAL COLD When we reflect that Burlington and Bristol are lo-When we reflect that Burlington and Bristol are lo-the 30th inst., under the superintendence of the cated just a mile apa: t on the opposite side of the river, you will perceive the extreme hopelessness of Jones' case.

It was a hard case. The mistake had occurred in the last day of the session, when legislators and transcribing clerks were laboring under the effects of a champagne supper followed by a champagne breakfast. The name of Smith had been put where Jones' ought to be and "wicey wercey," as the Latin poet has it.
